Introduction

Do you wish you could earn a livelihood more in line with your own ethics and principles?

This course is suitable for anyone regardless of their permaculture experience. It is being led by two people who have developed successful permaculture-related businesses in the complementary areas of teaching and food production. Aranya and Pat have more than 30 years of experience between them and plenty of lessons to share. During these two days you'll be guided in applying permaculture design thinking to help you clarify how your own specific skill set can meet your needs while also supporting the wider permaculture community. Where might your own niche be?

More than half of us in Britain it seems are unhappy in our jobs and yet most don't do anything about it. Discovering permaculture though can be the catalyst for many of us to start considering how we might make that transition to the more positive-impact lifestyle we aspire to. At first it may seem that the only available permaculture livelihoods are as a teacher or food grower, but these are just the more visible 'front end' of a wide network of interdependencies. You may at first consider your acquired skill-set to be redundant in your new future, but permaculture can be applied to most things. An accountant for instance is good with numbers and those skills are needed in many areas of life. Give it a little thought and you may realise that your skill set could be great asset in the permaculture community.

Course Content

We'll use our time together to take you through a design process, considering what skills and resources you already have, what you love to do and what you're excited about learning. We'll identify potential niches in the current permaculture community. We'll identify where you are leaking time, energy or resources and what's holding you back from creating that positive-impact livelihood now.

We'll apply the permaculture principles to help you create a poly-income (multiple elements for each important function) with a good seasonal spread (work with nature) and that allows you to work as much as you want but no more (appropriate scale). We'll identify who loves to do the jobs you don't (everything gardens) and seek out ways to get you noticed (increasing edge). By the end of the weekend we'll have helped you create a personalised plan to help you on your way. We hope you'll begin to feel you are part of a mutually supportive network too.

The Teachers

Aranya Dip. Perm. Des. Completing his Diploma in Applied Permaculture Design in 2003, Aranya started teaching the following year. He discovered this made his heart sing, so he made it his main focus. Since 2004 he has taught almost 80 two-week design courses, something he has no intention of stopping. He feels that it's a privilege to have the opportunity to teach "something that can make a real difference in all our lives". He is also excited about new ways in which permaculture thinking can help us, developing new courses on using its principles to help us design for optimising our health and creating ethical livelihoods. In the spring of 2012 Permanent Publications published his first book 'Permaculture Design - a Step-by-Step Guide', which evolved from a set of design course worksheets. He also writes occasionally for magazines and from time to time shares interesting items on his blog. Aranya is currently writing a second book, about a subject he's especially fascinated by, to be called 'Patterns Matter - in Permaculture Design'.

Pat Bowcock Dip. Perm. Des. Pat grew up in the Gloucestershire countryside, with a beautiful garden, an orchard, open fields, streams & ponds around her. Over the last twenty years she has been saddened to see whole woodlands cut down and not replaced, old hedgerows taken out to create fields for large machinery. It reflected the lack of respect and consideration we show to each other and the planet we are so much a part of and dependent upon. This inspired her to look for a piece of land to live in harmony with which she found in the form of a pony paddock in June 1999. Her aim was to create a haven for plants, wildlife, trees and people. Pat realized that she couldn't change the world alone, but she could take responsibility for what she ate, where she slept, her waste, and how she interacted with others. A central element of her intention was people care, planet care and fair share. Pat set about creating the systems she would need to put these principles into action. She was supported and encouraged by her family and the many people who came to help make Ourganics what it is today. Ourganics Evolving Systems has become her portfolio of design work which in July 2006 earned her the Diploma in Applied Permaculture Design.
